ARKLE

A Real Life Legend in Irish Horse Racing History

Arkle (19 April 1957–31 May 1970) was the first and arguably most iconic celebrity racehorse. His racing career flourished alongside the arrival of televised horse racing, and his charismatic personality matched his remarkable performance. Intelligent, stately, and kind, Arkle had a commanding presence both on and off the track. He was so popular that he even had a private secretary to handle his fan mail.

Born at Ballymacoll Stud, Co. Meath, this bay gelding, was the grandson of Nearco, an undefeated flat racehorse of 14 races. Arkle was named after a mountain in Scotland, near the estate of the Duchess of Westminster, Anne Grosvenor, who purchased him in 1960. He was trained by Tom Dreaper and ridden by Pat Taaffe during his esteemed racing career.

At 212, Arkle holds the highest Timeform rating ever awarded to a steeple chaser. Arkle's career was tragically cut short by injury, but not before winning three Cheltenham Gold Cups and numerous other top prizes, solidifying his status as a legendary figure in horse racing.

Arkle's story is not just one of victories and records; it's a story of an extraordinary horse that captured the imagination of a nation and the world. His legacy continues to inspire new generations of horse racing enthusiasts, ensuring that the legend of Arkle lives on.
